BOSTON EVENING POST. 1745

Extract from a letter from Capt. Bowden from the GREYHOUND, privateer of Poole, dated at Cherbourg, the 26th of June:

Dear Brother,

I am taken by a French dogger of 12 carriage guns and 150 men. We engaged her two and a half hours that time board and board. We had the advantage at first by fighting to leeward, but she being a better sailor; went to leeward of us and then so damaged our sail that we could not get from her nor work her vessels. We continued the engagement and once laid her alongside to board her when she discharged a whole broadside against our side and shot so fast ahead that we could not get near here. We had a great many wounded and some killed. I cannot tell exactly the number. The dogger suffered much in this action and I dare say we should have taken her though she was more than three times our force if we could have sailed as well, and if a rascal of a Swede who we boarded a little before had not discovered our weakness by informing the Frenchmen that we had but two carriage guns and 20 men and desiring a musket to fight against us.'

P.S. Our officers and private men fought like heroes and true sons of Britain and the French owe us to be brave Englishmen as they term it and make much of the Captain and likewise of the rest of the crew.
